MILAN KORDESTANI

#2 Best Selling Author, Entrepreneur, and
Gen Z AI Expert

Milan Kordestani is a 24-year-old social entrepreneur, author, and 4x startup founder. A unique figure in today's entrepreneurial landscape, his ventures span multiple sectors and reflect his commitment to social impact through business and technology.

Milan chairs Audo, an AI-driven career enhancement platform; Nota, a SaaS enterprise disrupting the news and content creation industry; The Doe, a digital publication offering vetted-anonymous authorship; and Guin Records, a record label with a focus on purpose-led artists. Each of these companies reflects his belief in ethical business practices and sustainable innovation.

He is also a best-selling author and thought leader, contributing to outlets like Forbes, Entrepreneur, HuffPost, and Rolling Stone. His book, "I'm Just Saying", explores the importance of civil discourse in society.

Milan's focus is on empowering the next generation of socially conscious entrepreneurs. His actions in his various roles - from chairman to writer to mentor - aim to inspire, guide, and instill a belief in the power of business and technology for social good. Despite his success, Milan measures it not by profit and growth, but by the social impact of his work. His mission is a constant drive towards positive change and a better world.

By the age of 19, Kordestani had founded four companies, Milan Farms focused on eggs, poultry, and saffron cultivation, Guin Records, an independent record label, Dormzi, a gig-based marketplace powered by college students, and The Doe, the world's first anonymous online publication.

Kordestani is the son of former Twitter executive chairman, Omid Kordestani and philanthropist Bita Daryabari. He was the first person to publish research based on his successful experimentation of growing Saffron hydroponically in the United States. Kordestani is also a contributor for the Huffington Post and Thrive Global.
